The kitchen is one of the most used spaces in the home, so it's only right that you'd want it to be an accurate reflection of your design aesthetic. It's where you prepare meals, gather with loved ones and maybe tackle homework with the kids, if your space allows. Even if a gut renovation isn't on your calendar, though, you can find inspiration in this rundown of the top kitchen trends for 2024, according to professional designers.

Whether you love the idea of going bold with color (green is trending, for instance) or prefer the warmth of wood tones, there's a kitchen design style out there for you that can be completed without a major overhaul to the space. You can introduce textured backsplash tiles for visual appeal, pull your kitchen together with herringbone flooring or incorporate brass accents for a sophisticated flair. If you don't want to break the bank, the design pros we consulted say upgrades can be as simple as carving out a coffee nook with a cart or showing off your favorite artwork (conversation pieces are always a good idea).

So, regardless of your lifestyle — whether you live solo, have a large family or enjoy entertaining regularly — don't think twice about experimenting with paint colors, cabinet choices, tiles, countertops, flooring, decorative accents and more, even if you have a small layout.

Freeform Islands

“A kitchen island does not have to conform to industry standards or conventional expectations. Instead, it can adapt to the room’s unique footprint and the surrounding space, transforming into an intriguing object as the focal point in the room and establishing a strong connection with the adjacent area. Working within oddly-shaped spaces can spark creativity and encourage the opportunity to break away from standard conventions.” – Philip Consalvo, PJCArchitecture

Shaker Cabinet Panels

“We’re seeing a lot of interest in 'Slim Shaker' cabinetry, which is somewhere in between a flat slab door and a traditional Shaker door. This transitional style features slimmer trim detailing for an elevated look.” – Philip Consalvo, PJCArchitecture
